HV000143

Date

1952

Primary Maker

RT Searles and Sons

Description

JEANNIE T was launched in 1952 under its original name THISTLE for the Kemp Bros. The craft was used for cray fishing and prawn trawling for a number of years and the initial arrangement included a sailing rig. Searles added a 1.2m long counter at an unknown date. It is now used as a pleasure craft, and is in good condition thanks to its original sturdy construction. It no longer has the sailing rig and has had modifications to the superstructure, however the hull structure is a good representation of its original configuration. JEANNIE T remains one of the few surviving examples of the scores of these craft that were built in the 1950s.
